

TINLEY GARDEN CLUB VISITS AT PILCHER PARK

Wednesday about 25 members of the Garden club of Tinley Park came to Joliet to spend the day in sight seeing and observation in the many lovely gardens of the city and surrounding territory, both public ones and those on private grounds which are such an attractive indication of Joliet's civic pride.

The Garden Buds, junior club, with their mothers, acted as hostesses and guides for the visitors. They assembled at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning in the home of Mrs. George Arbiter, 102 Woodworth avenue, and from there they went to Pilcher park where they met the members of the Tinley Park club. There was about 50 in the party and a picnic lunch was had in Pilcher park.

They first inspected the arboretum, after which they were taken to the J. R. Hobbs gardens on East Cass street, those of Albert Ohlhauser, on the Manhattan road; Albert E. Grinton, 714 Richards street; Julius Braun, Reed street; Richard Vance, Onida street; D. E. Pentz, 116 Dearborn avenue; George Hess, 409 North Nicholson street; E. E. Morton, 206 Buell avenue; George Arbiter, 102 Woodworth avenue and D. L. Mateer on Whitley avenue.

The gardens selected offered a wide variety since some are formal, some natural, some with pools and rock gardens. They also showed most of the plants which are native of Illinois, and will be studied from the viewpoint of landscaping and natural scenes.

Will County Waits State's Approval Of Paving Plans

Very little paving will be done this year under the Will County bond issue. A few sections of highway around Joliet and a mile thru the Village of Frankfort have been surveyed and plans made which are now awaiting the approval of the state highway department. By the time these plans are approved, bids advertised for and contracts let it will be late in the season to do much road work.

So far nothing has been done about surveying Wolf Road for paving from the Cook-Will County line north of Mokena thru the village to the Lincoln Highway. No assurance has been given that this road will be paved even next year.

The Town Doctor

(THE DOCTOR OF TOWNS)

"THANK YOUS" ARE A MEANS OF MUCH BUSINESS

There is a cigar store I know where they will give you back the amount of your purchase if the clerk fails to say, "Thank you".

There was a string of drug stores in Chicago that appeared to make it a habit of not saying, "Thank you", they were forced to sell out at a loss.

There is nothing that grates on my nerves quite as much as to pay a check, a bill, or present legal tender in payment of purchase, and have the recipient of my money fail to express any appreciation for the patronage extended. And there are millions of others just like me.

One of the most successful mercantile business concerns in the country has built its business on the motto, "It is only natural to trade where you are served best". Some cash register company might do good if they put a "Thank You" on their register, like cuckoos on clocks.

Why shouldn't the customer be thanked? If one man gave another a dollar and the receiver didn't even grunt to show appreciation, you'd call him an ungrateful cuss and a poor specimen of humanity; yet, many a sale at a profit equivalent to much more, is accepted with the air of "Well, it's coming to me". That is mighty poor business, or else inexcusable ignorance.

The cherry "Thank you", "Call again", or some other such card on the inside of the door, or over the cash register, shows the right spirit and helps, but isn't enough. The American public are fickle buyers, and for that reason "business goes where it is invited, and stays and comes back to the place where it is well treated and served best". There is many a business house, many a community, failing to make an expression of appreciation for patronage extended, that is thereby driving customers to its competitor, for it isn't always what is done, but what is left undone that counts.

"Thank You's" never drove business from any store or community, but lack of them has cost many thousands upon thousands of dollars.

There have also been many special musical numbers and features.

Buckbee of Rockford, John Norris Hall, Lincoln lecturer, and Representative Lottie Holman O'Neil together with speakers of the Epworth League organization, gave addresses during the course of a patriotic program Monday afternoon. Hammit, district superintendent of the Joliet-Dixon District in the Rock River conference.

Outline Needs of Civic Organization For Mokena

A meeting was called Monday night at the old school house for the purpose of talking over plans for organizing a civic club for Mokena. Ona E. McGovney gave an outline of the need of some kind of a civic organization so Mokena can get its share of the gas tax from the county and state and for securing recognition politically and otherwise.

The evening, however, was taken up entirely in a discussion of the proposed sewer problem by Mr. Cathers, the village engineer. He gave a detailed outline of the proposed sewer system and showed that in order to get away from any legal technicalities as to the sewerage disposal it would be necessary to build a primary treating plant costing $16,500 additional to the proposed sewer system, making a total cost of $52,000 for the improvement. Three acres of land would have to be purchased on which to locate the treating plant.

The sewer system is designed to take care of a population of 1,000. Twelve inch tile are to be used on Front street to Wolf Road and also for a short distance on this street and then the sizes will increase to 18, 20 and 30 inch tiles to the outlet.

Nothing was done about organizing a civic club and nothing has been announced as to what action will be taken about organizing a civic improvement organization.

The new school with a cost of $43,000 and the proposed sewer system at a cost of $52,000 makes a total of $95,000 to be met by taxes and special assessments by the tax payers of Mokena.

Tinley Park Lets Contracts For Sewers and Mains

Her husband, John Cappel, a well known stock raiser of this section, passed away about thirty years ago.

MOKENA BOARD RESCINDS SEWER RESOLUTION

The Mokena Local Board of Improvements at their reconvened public hearing on the proposed $34,609 sewer plan on Thursday night of this week, passed a resolution rescinding the resolution passed on June 20th creating the sewer system. No statement was made as to why the board took this action.

At the public hearing held a week ago, attorney A. H. Krusemark who represented the objecting property owners, had requested the board to pass a resolution knocking out the resolution passed June 20th creating the sewer system on the ground that the undertaking was too expensive and the plan was weak due to weak technical points. The action of the board on Thursday night was in line with this request but whether it was taken on the same grounds has not been disclosed.

On the other hand it is understood the board and the village engineer are working on a more elaborate plan, calling for two branches of drainage, one thru the Hirsch farm, the other thru the Marti drain age ditch. Surveyors have been at work all this week on the new plan and as soon as their reports are in and plans are made, the Local Board of Improvements will have to pass a new resolution and a date for another public hearing will have to be set and notices of the hearing mailed to the property owners directly affected by the proposed improvement. Attorney Krusemark who represents the objecting property owners states that if the new plan is very costly legal objections can be filed on the ground that the cost of the contemplated improvements exceeds the benefits.

It is said that a good drainage system could be installed for $6,000 as was done at Elwood. Frankfort has solved its drainage problems by creation of drainage districts. It would be a good idea to see what other towns have done and are doing with their drainage problems before installing an elaborate and expensive system.

Rabbits to Help Out

Meat Supply of Russia

The chief officials of the Russian commissariats of agriculture and trade at a meeting in Moscow with the collective farming organizations of the R. S. F. S. R. (Russia proper) have decided to rely on the rabbit to supplement the scarcity of meat that is expected to last for the next few years. The conference appointed a special committee of high officials, who were instructed to produce between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 "pedigree rabbits" during the present year, and to superintend the construction of state factories for the mass production of canned rabbit flesh, rabbit sausages and rabbit pasties.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Answer

Candidate's Supporter (gradually winding up)—So, I ask you, how much longer are you going to put up with this bunkum?

Chairman (sotto voice)—You've got exactly another five minutes, Mr. Woolfe.—Passing Show.

Covers Many Species

The term "Spanish bayonet" is applied to any one of various species of Yucca with sword-shaped leaves.

"The TRUTH About the MOVIES"

VERDON, Publisher 9421-42nd AVENUE, ELMHURST, NEW YORK CITY

Has Changed Meaning

The name "Patagonia" was first used to designate all the southern part of South America, but is now used to designate the region bounded on the north by the Rio Limay and the Rio Negro, the Atlantic on the east, the Strait of Magellan on the south and the Andes on the west.

City Man's View

The Pullman car traveler watched a tractor turning over the soil in a field along the railroad track. "No wonder farmers nowadays are always growling," he groused. "They don't get enough exercise."—Farm and Fireside.

Napoleon's Lament

Do you know what is more hard to bear than the reverses of fortune? It is the baseness, the hideous ingratitude of man.—Napoleon.

Politics is the greatest man's game in the world.

Pardon Me

"Ain't that cow got a lovely coat, Ted?"
"Yes, it's a Jersey."
"There, now! And I thought it was its skin!"—London Passing Show.

Young Men—Warning!

"Marry early and don't join clubs," is the recipe for happiness given by Sir Walter Runciman, British millionaire.

Where "Q" Got Name

The name of the letter Q comes from the French queue, meaning a tail, as the letter O with a tail.

A woman isn't necessarily smart because she says things that make other people smart.

Easy money is so-called because it is so easy to get rid of.

Success without honesty is failure.

Cases of recurrent constipation, due to insufficient bulk in the diet, should yield to Post's Bran Flakes with other parts of wheat. If your case is abnormal, consult a competent physician at once and follow his advice.

EFFECTIVE! DELICIOUS!

—a combination that makes it America's favorite bran cereal

MILLIONS of people now eat Post's Bran Flakes every day to avoid constipation. It gives them the bulk they need for healthful regularity and zest for living. And its delicious flavor makes it accepted as a matter of course on the breakfast menu. Here are bran flakes in their most appetizing form—and no less effective for being tempting.

Try them every morning for the next two weeks. See for yourself how beneficial they are—how delicious. Fine with cream or fruit, in muffins or bread. And always ready to serve, crisp from the package.

Preparing For State Fair From August 17 to 24

Preparations for the Illinois State Fair, August 17 to 24, are moving forward in a manner which indicates that the 1929 exposition will surpass all previous shows in point of attendance, excellence of exhibits and in general attractions. Scores of workmen are busy on the grounds making repairs to buildings and putting the entire plant in the best shape in many years. Thruout the grounds a multiplicity of activities show results in added comforts and conveniences.

Fair officials have just announced that the automobile dealers of Illinois are back again as exhibitors after a number of years of absence. Practically every well known make of automobile will be on exhibit this year with several models being shown for each make. The state fair premium list went into the mail this week. Former exhibitors, farm bureaus and other interested persons will be supplied as rapidly as the books can be mailed. The premium book lists a number of new departments which will be of general interest.

The schedule of special days is announced as follows:
Saturday, August 17—Automobile Race Day.
Sunday, August 18—Sacred Concert.

Monday, August 19—Children's Day.
Tuesday, August 20—Springfield Day.

Wednesday, August 21—Veterans Day.

Thursday, August 22—Governor's Day.

Friday, August 23—Farm Bureau Day.

Saturday, August 24—Automobile Race Day.

Premium offerings, in the departments that advance quality production in livestock, field, orchard, and garden products, art, needlework, culinary skill, and all the arts and crafts in general, show a wider range of opportunity for exhibitors this year. The educational features, such as the premium offerings for the prize work of students, the 4-H department, boys' school, girls' school and the vocational agricultural class exhibit section, all come in for particular attention in the revised premium offerings, reflecting the state administration's determination to improve the fair along the lines for which it is intended—for the advancement of agricultural, industrial and educational development of the state of Illinois.

A FULL LIST OF FOODS

Ask for the canned foods you like at your favorite chain or grocery store. If it hasn't them the first time, ask again, and it will soon stock the foods that are in demand. In order to facilitate your doing this we are appending hereto a full list of the principal foods that come in cans. Those put up in the sanitary enamel lined cans which have become so popular with the housewife are marked with a. E. There are a few other canned food specialties produced in small amounts, in addition to those listed below, but this list illustrates the amazing variety of pure, safe foods now available in cans.*

Auto Fees Show Big Increase

Fees collected by the Secretary of State in the first six months of 1929 show an increase of $1,950,566.33 over the same period last year, according to figures announced today by the accounting department of secretary of state William J. Stratton's office.

state assumed office early last January, the various departments he administers collected a total of $17,304,521.52 as compared with $15,353,955.19 for the same period last year.

The automobile department collected $15,841,439.49 which is an increase of $1,433,206.82 over the first six months of 1928.

This department already has issued licenses for 93,741 more passenger cars than were registered in the same period of 1928. Trucks show an increase of 11,758 and chauffeurs 6,647. Truck licenses total 180,221 and chauffeurs 86,804. The passenger car registration to date is 1,262,673.

At the end of 1928 it was estimated that 65,000 more automobiles had been registered in Illinois than in 1927. Considering that 93,471 more cars already have been registered this year than were licensed in the first half of 1928, there is every indication the total increase for 1929 over 1928 will double the total increase of 1928 over 1927.

The collections of the corporation department also showed large gains for the first half of this year as compared with the same period in 1928.

To date this department has collected $1,382,797.21 whereas $858,402.86 was collected in the first six months of 1928. This is an increase of $524,394.35. The collections from foreign corporations more than double while those from domestic concerns almost reached that ratio.

Substantial increases also were registered by other departments of the secretary of state's office.

ELECTION DAY SCENE IN TOKYO---

In Japan as elsewhere, the modern girl seems to have arrived. The National Kimono has been discarded by her and she has gone into politics. Perhaps in the very near future the ancient and still semi-feudal Empire of Nippon will extend suffrage to the women of the Kingdom. The photo shows some of the ardent women workers in the suffrage cause dressed in modern frocks, coats and hats. They are expounding their demand for votes during the recent municipal elections in Tokio. The large statue of Saigo Takamori, the great national hero, can be seen in the background. (Herbert)

DON'T COME ALONE

Slaves Were Shaved

A clean-shaven face in the East was originally a sign of servitude. Old pictures show kings and conquerors heavily bearded and with long hair, while their slaves and captives are clean-shaven and close-cropped. The Greeks and the Romans later discarded "face fungus," as it gave their enemies a hand-hold in the close fighting, which was, of course, the rule in those days.

Lighthouse Illumination

Most of the American lighthouses guarding ships against coastal rocks have now run the complete gamut of lighting in the last 200 years. They began with fish oil and then proceeded through sperm oil, rapeseed or colza oil, lard oil, vaporized kerosene with incandescent mantles and finally electricity upon which main dependence is put nowadays.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescription product.

Servant Problem's Beginning

Bishop E. D. Mouzon told a story in an address in Nashville.

"A little girl," he began, "came home from her first visit to Sunday school in a very happy mood.

"Oh, mama," she said, "it was so lovely. A lady told us about a gentleman named Adam and a lady named Eve who lived in a lovely garden, and oh, they were so happy there till the servant came."

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. At your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

THE STORY

Jim Stanley, New York business man, orders his desk and phone taken to his home, intending to finish his dictation there. Rollo Waterman, his partner, comes in. Both are in love with Doris Colby. Stanley proposes to Doris, and she agrees. Waterman wins, Nina Morgan, Waterman's secretary and mistress, has overheard his conversation with Stanley and resents Waterman's plan to desert. Waterman says he is penniless and must make a rich marriage. He urges Nina to tell Doris that Stanley has wronged her (Nina). Doris admits to her father her interest in both men, but is unable to decide which to marry. Nina tells Doris her story, exacting a promise that Doris will not tell the source of her information. Doris is convinced of Stanley's duplicity and is broken-hearted, realizing that it is Stanley she loves. Waterman proposes and Doris accepts him. Stanley accepts the situation, and as a wedding present gives his share of the business to Waterman. He arranges with his secretary, Frank Wilson, to take charge of his other business interests. He is going to India. Doris tells Waterman part of Nina's story and he promises to "try" to find the girl. Frank Wilson, aware of Waterman's crookedness, leaves his employ. The latter begins to importune Doris for money.

Nevertheless, she was intelligent, and there came a time when with the best will in the world she could no longer shut her eyes to the fact that all was not well with her husband. He did, it is true, manage occasionally to make good some of the amount which she advanced him, but on the whole the balance was heavy on the wrong side of the ledger. His luck, as he called it, ran pretty steadily against him. His nerves played him false with increasing frequency. He found himself drinking in the middle of the day, a thing he had never done before in all his life. Occasionally Doris saw him a little the worse for wear. She thought little of this; she was no prude. She had made up her mind that she would have no wrangling with her husband, and in view of his growing irritability, she feared that any reference to this matter would precipitate a quarrel.

Bitterly she regretted the absence of Stanley, for she began to suspect that his had been the influence that had kept her husband straight for years. She believed that if Stanley had not gone away, things would have continued well.

"I wonder," she said one evening at dinner, "when Jim's coming back."

Waterman started slightly. Stanley's name had not been mentioned between them for months. "I have no idea," he said.

"I wonder if that confidential man of his—what was his name?"

"Wilson?"

"Yes, Wilson. Do you know his address?"

"No, I don't. Why?"

"I thought I would write and ask him."

"Why? What difference does it make?" He spoke with a touch of asperity.

It was clear that the subject annoyed him, so she abandoned it; but she did not put the thought from her mind, and the next day she telephoned to Waterman's head clerk for Wilson's address, got it, and wrote him a note. In response, Wilson appeared at the Waterman apartment at three o'clock of the next day.

"Forgive my asking you to come here in the middle of the business day, Mr. Wilson, but I could not very well find another hour free. I am anxious," said Doris, "for certain reasons, to know when Mr. Stanley is returning."

"I am sorry I cannot tell you," replied the secretary.

"Haven't you heard from him?"

"Oh yes, I got a cable when he landed at Yokohama."

"And that is all?"

"Absolutely all."

"He has buried himself, hasn't he?"

"That, Mrs. Waterman, was his idea, I think. He decided to experiment a bit and added, 'I have some reason for thinking that when Mr. Stanley went away he wasn't quite happy.'"

Characteristically the blue eyes widened just a bit. "Really," she said, "do you know why?"

"Not positively, but I could make a guess."

"Do you mind guessing for my benefit?" she asked. "You know I am a very old friend."

"I'm sorry, but it is so vague a guess and touches on so intimate a matter, that I scarcely feel justified in enlarging upon it."

Suddenly her old affection for Stanley revived. Complicated with it, too, was an abrupt realization of a fact of which she had been dimly conscious for some time, the fact that she was intensely worried about her husband. Under the spur of these mingled emotions, she said:

"Mr. Wilson, I wish very much that Mr. Stanley would come back."

"I wish so, too."

"You see I speak so frankly to you, knowing more or less of the intimate relations that have existed between you and Mr. Stanley I have heard him speak more than once of your devotion and your loyalty to him."

"You may count upon that, Mrs. Waterman."

"I am sure of it. That's why I am so frank. I know that you are, or have been, intimately acquainted with the details of the business in which my husband and Mr. Stanley were engaged, and that you were for some time in my husband's office after Mr. Stanley went away. I have been a little worried about that business in the last few weeks. Perhaps my worry is unnecessary, but I have been thinking that maybe my husband, out of a mistaken sense of kindness to me, has not told me everything that I should like to know. There have been times when I felt that things were not going well with him in the Street, and perhaps it is because of my wish to be reassured that I am asking you to tell me in strictest confidence what you know about it."

Wilson Reflected. How Much Should He Be Justified in Telling Her?

"But Mrs. Waterman," objected Wilson, "it has been some months since I left the office."

"I know that," she answered, "but were things quite well there when you left?"

"Frankly," said Wilson, "not altogether, to my way of thinking."

"Do you mind going into particulars?"

Wilson reflected. How much should he be justified in telling her? He decided to compromise.

"No, certainly not," he said. "It was merely that Mr. Waterman had embarked upon some operations in the Street which did not appear to me exactly conservative. Of course I am ready to admit I may have been influenced by the fact that I was sure they were operations Mr. Stanley would not have approved. You see, my business education has been entirely in the hands of Mr. Stanley."

Doris did not press the point further. She had a suspicion that Wilson was not telling all he knew, but she was sure that so far as he had gone he had said what he thought. He had confirmed her suspicions. Things were not well with her husband in the Street.

"Thank you, Mr. Wilson," she said, "for your frankness. That is all I wished to know." And she added defensively, "I wished to know what you have told me because I want in every possible way to be of help to my husband."

"I understand," he answered.

Wilson departed with mixed emotions. It was not the first time he had seen Doris Colby. He had gone to her more than once on various missions for Stanley in the old days. It had always thrilled him to look at her. It thrilled him still. She was more beautiful than ever, he thought, and the anxiety which sat so clearly upon her candid brow added just now to the fascination which she had always had for him. It was clear to Wilson, also, that Waterman was in the process of being found out. He was not aware, a yet, that the man was in possession of stolen goods, but he knew perfectly well that he was a humbug and a fraud. And now, it appeared, his unmasking was approaching. He could not repress a sense of satisfaction.

At that very moment, at the close of business, Waterman sat alone in his office. He was reviewing his growing perplexities. It was not a pleasant process, and his gloom was not at all dispelled by the voice of the office boy who opened the door at that moment and said:

"Mr. Bromfield asking for you, sir."

Bromfield was one of the last people in the world he wished to see. It is true that shortly after his marriage, by the simple process of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, he had discharged his obligation to the gambler, and having done so had sworn a solemn vow that he would never enter that hall of chance again. But that vow, like many others, had been broken. His luck couldn't always be bad, he thought, and he was due to win—overdue. In this he was in error. His unlucky streak continued, and the consequence was that shortly he found himself heavily in Bromfield's debt once more. Here came his creditor again. He sighed heavily as he told the boy to bring him in. But before the door opened to admit his visitor he was again his usual smiling self.

"Come in, come in, Bromfield," he called, as to a welcome guest. "How are you? Glad to see you."

"I happened to be passing by," said Bromfield, "and, the market having closed, I thought I would drop in for a chat."

"Very good of you, I am sure."

"By the way," went on the gambler. "I'm sorry I haven't seen you at my place of late."

"No," admitted Waterman, "fact is, I didn't wish to come there again until I was able to square things up with you."

"And when will that be, do you think?"

"Oh, very soon, I hope."

"Your hope is mine also." They smiled together, a little grimly perhaps, and Bromfield went on. "You couldn't make it any more definite than that, I suppose?"

"Well, no, not at the moment."

"Sorry. I could use money just now. You see, a number of gentlemen with whom I do business seem to have had a run of bad luck of late."

"Do I understand that you complain of that?" grinned Waterman.

"Not altogether," admitted the other, "but you see their bad luck seems not to have been confined strictly to their dealings with me. I'm a benevolent person and I'm always sorry to hear that any of my friends have had bad luck with other people than myself."

"Quite comprehensible," admitted Waterman.

"If you could see my books you would clearly understand why I find it necessary to annoy you—which, believe me, I sincerely regret to be obliged to do."

"I share your regret, Mr. Bromfield—in fact my heart bleeds for you."

"Come now," returned Bromfield, with irony, "you mustn't let it worry you too much. Your sympathetic heart will be the ruin of you if you keep on like this. Well, I must be getting on. I have one or two other visits to make in the immediate neighborhood."

"Of a similar character?"

"Yes, I am sorry to say."

"Well, good hunting."

Bromfield smiled and departed with a wave of his stick.

With his departure, Waterman's assumption of cheer departed also. Care returned and sat darkly upon his brow. He was not deceived by Bromfield's urbanity. He knew perfectly well what it meant. It meant that some way, somehow, he must very shortly produce the sixty thousand dollars which he owed the gambler, or else—It was not a pleasant prospect.

"Confound the fellow," he thought. "Comes in here covered with diamonds to dun me. Diamonds!" The word struck him forcibly. "Diamonds!" He got up and took a turn about the room. Suddenly he could think of nothing else. "Diamonds—heaps of diamonds. Hm!"

CHAPTER IX

"My dear General," said Mr. Colby, "I really cannot understand how such a wise old fox as you ever came to be involved in this transaction! From the very first it was obviously wild speculation."

Silver Utensils Once Prerogative of Rank

In the early days of civilization sterling silver was restricted to royalty and the nobility. In fact, we are told that at one period of England's history the number of sterling silver spoons and suchlike one could own were actually restricted and governed by statute. One could almost reconstruct the regulatory table—one lord, one spoon; one duke, four spoons; one princess, one chest, and so on. Sterling was displayed upon all ceremonial occasions and these aristocrats of a far past day treasured their silver to as great an extent as the young bride of today.

Five hundred years ago, with the advent of the Florentine republic, a new era began. Foreign commerce brought wealth to men of lesser rank, who established magnificent homes and filled them with works of art and beauty, chief among which was sterling. Today sterling silver continues to be the inevitable tableware for the person of discrimination. Its use is not confined to the royal

"Man," announced the General, "is a speculative animal. The instinct for taking a chance is as old as the human race."

"You mean the instinct for getting something for nothing, don't you?"

"Call it what you like, it amounts to the same thing. Every man enjoys a gamble, even yourself."

"And how," inquired the lawyer, "do you make me out a gambler?"

"Why," replied the General, "easy enough. Every time you go into court to argue a case you're dealing with chance."

"Really! I should have thought that a few trifles like justice, experience and intelligence were the governing elements."

"I don't say there isn't something in those things, but the element of chance enters into every case you try just the same, and you know it. It makes a lot of difference to you what judge is trying your case. It makes a difference whether the judge slept well the night before. More chance. There's a lot of luck about your jury, too. Sometimes you want an intelligent jury and you get a stupid one. Sometimes you want dumbbells and you get smart Alecks. Don't tell me! Every time you try a case you take a chance, and I suppose that's how you satisfy your particular liking for a gamble."

The lawyer and his client were lunching at the top of a Broadway cliff. In the beautiful grill room which was the feature of the Lawyers' club. General Leavitt, U. S. A., Retired, was a florid, hearty man of seventy-one or two, who, though still in full possession of all his physical and mental faculties, had been relegated to more or less private life a few years previously by the operation of the age limit law. He had taken the precaution when quite a young soldier of providing for his old age by marrying a rich wife. She had died some ten years before, and it was concerning the management of her property, which she had left entirely to the General, that he was now conversing with his counsel.

"As I was saying, Alexander," he went on, "you should cultivate the sporting instinct outside of your own profession. It will rattle your bones a bit. Now there's your son-in-law; he's got the right idea. He's a business man from ten to three, and after that he's a sportsman, though I must say the last time I saw him he didn't seem to be having any the best of the luck. By the way, do you ever go to Bromfield's?"

"No," said Colby, "not since I was a young fellow and Bromfield used to run a place at Saratoga. It was rather amusing in those days."

"Everything was more amusing in those days," sighed the General. However, our friend Bromfield is still gratifying the human propensity for taking a chance, even though his stage setting is not what it was."

"Er—you say," inquired Colby casually, "my son-in-law didn't seem to be having the best of luck last time you saw him there?"

"Well, no, Alexander," returned the soldier, "he wasn't what you might call eating 'em up. But I didn't stay to see the finish. I quit about two-thirty a. m. I'm not as young as I was."

"But really," said Mr. Colby, "getting back to business, this speculative transaction of yours."

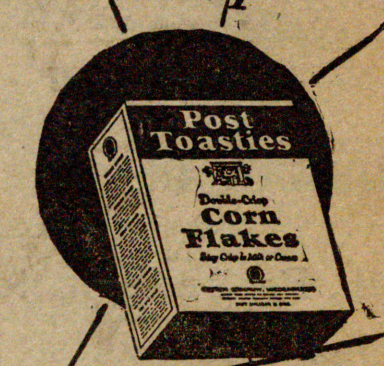

"Oh d—n it," said the General, "let up. If I didn't play around a little I should go mad, bite myself in the calf of the leg and die of hydrophobia. It wasn't for people like me what the h— do you think would become of people like you, I should like to know?"

Descending to his office ten stories below, Mr. Colby kept two millionaires waiting fifteen minutes while he considered the case of his son-in-law. He had been somewhat disappointed by his daughter's choice, but true to his announcement to Doris, he had not voiced that disappointment. He had made up his mind not to interfere either in her choice of a husband or in her relations with that husband, once she had acquired him. Nevertheless he kept his eyes wide open, according to his custom—for while he knew the peril of unwelcome interference between husband and wife, he was determined to be in a position to help his daughter if the time should ever come when she should ask it.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination ofenna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

"Nolichucky Jack" and His "Bonny Kate"

John Sevier

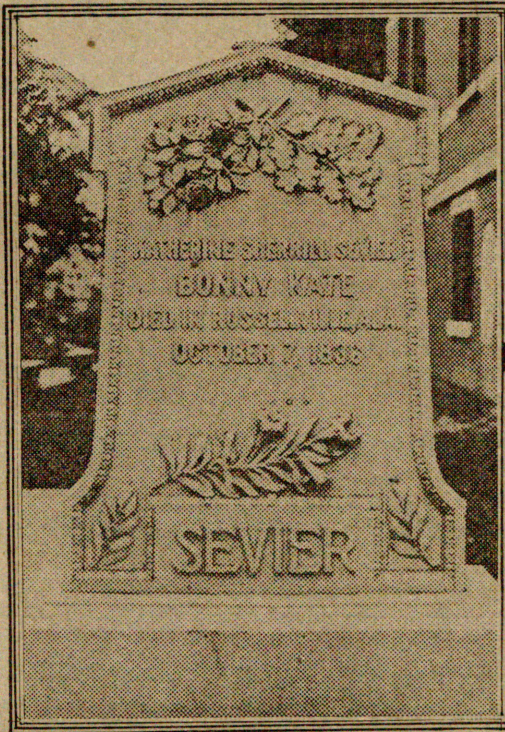

WHERE THE KING'S MOUNTAIN MEN RALLIED

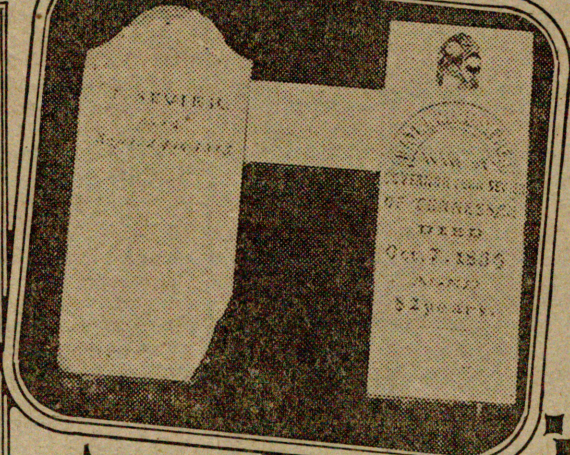

SEVIER MONUMENT IN KNOXVILLE

CLOSE-UP OF SEVIER MONUMENT

BONNY KATE'S MONUMENT

ORIGINAL SEVIER TOMBSTONES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NEAR the courthouse at Knoxville, Tenn., stands a tall white obelisk. As you walk along one of the shady paths in the courthouse yard and approach the towering stone these words meet your eye: "The First Governor of Tennessee—John Sevier, 'Nolichucky Jack,' September 23, 1744; September 24, 1815—Pioneer, Soldier, Statesman and One of the Founders of the Republic."

You've never heard of "Nolichucky Jack"? Then you've missed knowing one of the really great characters of the American frontier and one of the most picturesque figures in all our history. Walk around the monument and read this inscription: "Governor of the state of Franklin; Six terms governor of Tennessee; Four times elected to congress; A projector and hero of King's Mountain; 35 battles—35 victories; His Indian war cry was: 'Here they are! Come on, boys, come on!'"

Thrilling as is the story which those words suggest, it is not complete until you read an inscription on still another side of the monument. Here it is: "Katherine Sherrill Sevier, 'Bonny Kate,' came when a girl with her parents to Tennessee from North Carolina. Married John Sevier August 14, 1780, when she was twenty-six. She became the mother of eight children and died October 7, 1836, aged eighty-two. Moved from Russellville, Ala., and reinterred here July 22, 1922."

And set in the brick walls of the courthouse nearby is a still more interesting memento of this great frontiersman and his pioneer wife. There you will see the original tombstones of Sevier and his "Bonny Kate" which were erected over their graves in Alabama and moved to their present location nearly 100 years later. One bears the simple inscription "J. Sevier Died September 24, 1815." The other reads "Catharine Sevier (Notice the difference in spelling), Wife of Governor John Sevier of Tennessee. Died October 7, 1836. Aged eighty-two years." These had been erected over their graves in Alabama, where they spent their last years. For history, you see, had not yet given their people the proper perspective of time through which to view their part in building the nation and it was not until nearly a century later that the Tennesseans reclaimed them as their own and paid to them in enduring stone the honors due their greatness.

For this John Sevier is characterized by one historian thus: "The organizer of the first, free and independent government on the continent. The leader of a great commonwealth; an Indian fighter whom few have ever equalled; a soldier who could meet the finest troops on the continent, in the field and with inferior numbers win success from adverse circumstances; an administrator who could conduct the affairs of his fellowmen under circumstances of the greatest difficulty; a statesman who takes rank not far behind those colossal men who watched the travail pains and facilitated the delivery of the new nation to be."

Of him, too, another historian has written, "The most daring spirit. . . . was the young John Sevier of French Huguenot family (originally spelled Xavier) born in Augusta county, Va. It was from Millerstown in Shenandoah county where he was living the uneventful life of a small farmer that he emigrated in December, 1773, to the Watauga region (in eastern Tennessee). With his arrival there begins one of the most fascinating and romantic careers recorded in the varied and stirring annals of the old Southwest. In this daring and impetuous young fellow, fair-haired, blue-eyed, magnetic, debonaire—of powerful build, splendid proportions and athletic skill—we behold the gallant exemplar of the truly heroic life of the border. The story of his life, thrilling in the extreme, is rich in all the multi-colored elements which impart romance to the arduous struggle of American civilization in the opening years of the Republic."

The Watauga settlement had been made in 1769-70, by James Robertson and a party of North Carolinians, who had climbed the mountains and built their cabins in a fertile valley on the other side. The young Virginian, who was a man of wealth in those days, soon became a leader in the settlement and for the next 43 years he was the one outstanding figure in that part of the frontier country. For it was not long after his arrival that he had an opportunity to demonstrate his qualities of leadership in the troubles with the Indians which started during the Dunmore war of 1774 and continued after the outbreak of the Revolution. During the Revolution Sevier more than once broke up the plans of the British for launching the savages upon the borders and thus, delivering a fatal stroke against the colonies who were revolting against the mother country.

One of the first of the British attempts was in 1775 when a war party attacked a rude palisaded inclosure built on the banks of the Watauga, near Sycamore Shoals. The fort was closely besieged for some 40 days and during this time there occurred the romantic episode which has made famous the story of "Nolichucky Jack" and his "Bonny Kate." Despite warning some of the people in the fort, growing tired of the confinement, had gone outside the walls. A party of savages suddenly appeared and tried to cut them off. At the first alarm Sevier sent his men to the walls to cover the flight of the terror-stricken fugitives by a sharp rifle fire which would hold off the Indians until all had reached safety. One young girl, Katherine Sherrill, in her terror, leaped to the top of the palisade and fell over the walls into the arms of the commander. She seemed to have leaped into his heart also, for they were married soon after.

During this siege of the fort, Sevier and his men inflicted such heavy losses upon the Indians that Oconostota, the great war chief of the Cherokees, withdrew his warriors. But the genius of Sevier was not shown so much in defensive tactics as it was in the tactics of attack. Time and again he led the borderers on swift expeditions to surprise an Indian village and drive them into headlong rout. Then after destroying the village and the crops he withdrew to the Watauga settlement. In fact long before there was a Napoleon, "Nolichucky Jack" adopted the Napoleonic idea of a small, mobile, concentrated body, hurled swiftly upon a superior, but scattered force. And this policy of audacity and speed soon broke the spirit of the Cherokees and their allies and prevented their being used by the British in a rear attack on the colonies who were engaged in their desperate struggle on the Atlantic seaboard.

It was these same tactics which Sevier used in winning one of the most brilliant victories of the Revolution—the dash to trap Colonel Ferguson and his force of British at King's Mountain and overwhelm them before they could receive aid from Cornwallis. Not far from Johnson City, Tenn., stands a monument where Sevier, Campbell, Shelby, and other leaders rallied the mountain men for the march over the Great Smokies to take part in that battle which was afterwards to be known as "the turning point of the Revolution." For the loss suffered by the British on King's Mountain was one of the steps which led to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown and the end of the Revolution.

At the close of the Revolution the North Carolina legislature, without consulting the settlers' wishes, ceded the Watauga region to the federal government with the provision that it must be accepted within two years. During the two years congress debated the matter and finally rejected the gift. While the discussion was going on in congress, North Carolina withdrew her courts and militia and the settlers awoke to the fact that they were under the protection of neither the state nor the federal government. And from neither could they gain any help in repelling the attacks of the Indians, who were again becoming troublesome. Although they were still subject to federal government taxes they were receiving nothing in return for them. Finally angered by being thus deserted by the state and nation which they had served so well during the trying times of the Revolution, the frontiersmen decided to establish a state of their own. And in 1784 there came into existence the independent state of Franklin, a commonwealth unique in American history. The leader to whom they turned was "Nolichucky Jack" Sevier and during the stormy history of that commonwealth, he, as before, was the outstanding leader of the east Tennessee frontiersmen. For North Carolina, after withdrawing the act of cession, attempted to assert her authority over that region again. As a governor of the commonwealth and a man whose forceful personality naturally made enemies for him, Sevier was singled out for punishment. He was treacherously betrayed, captured and afterwards tried at Morgantown, N. C., for high treason. Immediately 1,500 of the trans-Allegheny borderers assembled for the rescue of their beloved "Nolichucky Jack." For awhile a civil war seemed imminent. Then, aided by some of his old comrades-in-arms, Sevier made a spectacular escape, whereupon the people of the Watauga country promptly elected him to the North Carolina legislature. There was some protest about his taking his seat but eventually he was allowed to hold the office. When North Carolina ratified the Federal Constitution, and became one of the sisterhood of states, one congressman was to represent the North Carolina district beyond the mountains. It goes without saying that Sevier was unanimously elected.

When Tennessee became a territory, he was made general of the militia and when she became a state, he was chosen governor without opposition. He was elected to that position for three successive terms and then, under the constitution, being ineligible for a period of two years, he was thereafter elected for three more successive terms, after which he was sent back to congress, and three times re-elected. "Nolichucky Jack" died as he had lived, in the harness, and in the field. The end came in 1815, in a tent on a surveying expedition for the government, surrounded by his soldiers. His wife lived on for more than a score of years and was buried first in Alabama where she died. But in 1922 her body was brought back to Tennessee and there in the very heart of the country where this pioneer couple saw history in the making, and helped make it, "Nolichucky Jack" and his "Bonny Kate" are together.

Lesson for July 21

EZEKIEL'S VISION OF HOPE

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 47:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Hope.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Ezekiel's Message of Hope.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Will the Right Finally Win?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Cure for the World's Ills.

Ezekiel's final vision, chapters 40 to 48, exhibits a comprehensive view of the restored order when the Messiah shall hold sway over the whole earth. Our lesson for today is but a small part of this vision. It can be understood only in the light of the whole. The following outstanding facts should be noted:

1. The restored temple (chs. 40-42).
2. The return of Jehovah. (ch. 43).
3. The arrangement of the services of the temple (chs. 44-46).
4. The river flowing from the temple (47:1-12).
5. The land apportioned among the people (47:13-48:29).
6. The holy city (48:30-35).

In the attempted interpretation of this vision, some five different views are held. The one preferred by the present writer is that it is a prediction of the temple which shall be erected in Messianic times. The literal view prevents wild speculation and at the same time permits the fullest figurative application. In fact, the Holy Spirit gives the interpretation of the waters flowing from the smitten rock (1 Cor. 10:4) in such a way as to leave no doubt as to its meaning. The river flowing forth from the sanctuary typifies the river of life, the salvation of Christ flowing forth to the world. Observe:

- I. The River's Source (vv. 1, 2).

It flows forth from the house—the restored temple where God has come to dwell. It flows from the divine presence. This flowing of the waters is miraculous. So is the eternal life which proceeds from Calvary's cross. Because Christ is divine, His shed blood has power to give life. It is to be noted that the stream came by way of the altar (v. 1), showing that eternal life for the world proceeds from God by way of the cross. Perhaps the deepest mystery of life is how life can spring out of death. Despite its mystery, the student of the Holy Scriptures and of physical science knows that life out of death is the philosophy of the universe. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone."

- II. The Deepening River (vv. 3-5).

The deepening and enlarging of its tributaries. For the first quarter mile the depth was to the ankles. By the time it had reached one-half mile it was to the knees. Till the distance of three-fourths mile was reached it was to the waist, and at the end of the first mile it was too deep to ford—"waters to swim in." The spiritual truth to be derived from this figure is that the life and salvation which have flowed forth from Calvary made vital by the Holy Spirit, have widened and deepened through the centuries and dispensations. This is especially true of the individual who yields himself to the Holy Spirit.

- III. The Healing Effect of the Waters (vv. 6-12).

There is life in the progress of this river. "Everything shall live whither the river cometh" (v. 9). It flows from the altar toward the east country down into the desert and into the Dead sea. "The region of the Dead sea which has been the embodiment of barrenness and desolation, in the coming day is to be changed into a scene of life and fruitfulness."—Gray.

1. Trees on the banks of the river (vv. 7, 8).

Just as vegetation flourishes near the river, so wherever Christ's salvation is witnessed to in the energy of the Holy Ghost, life comes. This has been true throughout the centuries of church history. The details of fruitfulness are enumerated in verse 12.

2. Everything in the waters shall live (v. 9). Wherever the stream flows, there shall be life.

3. The waters of the Dead sea shall be healed (v. 10). Fishers shall gather from the Dead sea even as from the Mediterranean. The gospel brings life to those in trespasses and sin. The world is dead and therefore in need of the life-giving stream from Calvary.

His Powers a Mystery to Master of Figures

William Strong, the man who could compute figures with the speed and accuracy of an adding machine—and never knew how he did it—is dead. He would stand beside a railroad track as a long freight rolled by, observing the car numbers, and when the caboose flashed past he would announce the total as correctly as the tabulator with paper and pad who stood beside him.

Merchants employed him at inventory time in place of using adding machines. He would tell engineers how many bricks would be needed for a wall; compute cube root; give exact dates the instant a birth date was given him. Always to the question, "How do you do it?" he would answer, "I do not know." Strong, who was fifty, died recently on a railroad viaduct in Bartonville, England, where he was in the habit of going daily to perform the feat of totaling box car numbers, "just to keep in practice," he said.

WORLD'S FAIR NEWS NOTES

Public-minded citizens are being invited to join "A Beautiful Chicago League" which was incorporated at Springfield by seven prominent business and professional men who aim "to encourage the building of beautiful buildings as well as big buildings, so as to show the people of the world in 1933 not only a great Chicago, but a beautiful Chicago."

F. Kelly, president of The Fair; Frank McNally, architect; Harold E. Foreman, president of the National Bank; Eric E. Hall, county architect; O. W. Rosenthal, contractor; Ernest J. Krueger, president of the Steuben Club, and Charles S. Peterson, city treasurer.

Announcement has also just been made that Vincent Bendix, president of the corporation which bears his name, is planning to erect a Buddhist temple in Chicago in time for the 1933 Century of Progress exposition.

The temple will be reproduced from architectural drawings made in China and furnished with decorations and musical instruments that have been used in these temples for ages.

The decorations and furnishings will be selected in China by Dr. Sven Hedin, head of the Sino-Swedish expedition into China, which is about to start from Stockholm, and to which Mr. Bendix has contributed $135,000.

It is expected that the temple will be erected on one of the Bendix properties on the north side.
